

Rachel Fraser

North End Station

fleeting glimpses passed between train mates track the progress of subway lines on mounted maps

black coffee and burnt plastic fill the air with acrid odour a spoor for visitors and residents to sniff out alike

few passengers speak for fear of treading on the silence that steps so easily between the rolling of the underground

